The "Act to Save Lives": What Law Enforcement Needs to Know about CA AB392

Thursday, October 22, 10am PT

When Governor Gavin Newsom signed CA AB392 into law on August 19, it marked the end of a tumultuous battle over police use of force legislation that had dominated headlines since the shooting of Stephon Clark more than a year earlier.

Dubbed “The Act to Save Lives,” CA AB392 has been widely reported as imposing a new, much more restrictive standard for police use of deadly force. Yet close legal analysis of the legislation shows a much more complex picture. It’s not surprising, therefore, that many officers and police executives are confused and concerned about the changes CA AB392 impose on agencies.

Join Lexipol co-founder and veteran California attorney Bruce Praet in this 30-minute webinar to learn more about CA AB392 and how it does—and doesn’t—change the standards governing police use of force in California.

You’ll Learn:

- Key provisions of the new law and what they reveal about how officer use of deadly force will be regarded by the courts
- How officers’ pre-force tactics will be taken into consideration
- What the new legislation says about officer encounters with people with mental illness and suicidal subjects
